propongas Beatriz (Uruguay) more Amazing visit of the capital city of China My wife and I spent a wonderful time in Beijing with our local cuisine at its best, and walked to vibrant Hutongs during rush hour. It was a beautiful experience that we will never forget. As for our guide, Tom, it was a pleasure to meet him: such an intelligent and inspiring person who not only did prepare excellent information on the landmarks we saw, but also introduced us into the fascinating Chinese culture. He always answered exhaustively to our questions, adapted our itinerary to the situation (Tomb Sweeping Holiday) and gave us good tips on how to spend our free time after the guided tours. We will always recommend Tom as a guide and China Highlights as a trustworthy company for taking a tour around Beijing tour with Tom Tom was an excellent guide for our days in Beijing, from helping us to navigate the busy city, and giving us information on The Forbidden City and Temples. Our day at The Great Wall was so enjoyable and finished off with a lovely meal. Tom also gave us great restaurant choices, thank you Tom more Contributions by our blogger Jen Murray, some photos by photographer Anton Kicker. We don't agree with CNN Travel that Hong Kong is the best city in the world. But Shenzhen's unique vibrancy is one that you could only see with your own eyes.
As soon as you step off the plane you'll be able to breathe in the happy vibe that's beaming off the grandiose airport ceiling. So let the city you regret you didn't fall in love with earlier: The Greenery: If you have been to any other cities in China before you came to Shenzhen, here's the first thing you'll notice: Every street corner and apartment complex is covered with a variety of verdant plants. Where there is unoccupied space, there is green. The kapok blossoms along the Beihuan highway in the spring chill, and the palm trees standing like royals in the Mangrove Park will surely put a smile on your face. The Parks: For you corny lovebirds out there, you don't have to spend any money to enjoy a perfectly romantic day out. Ride a bike along the broad walkway in the Mangrove Park; gaze down the lake from the top of the archaic stone bridge in Lychee Park, or laze away the afternoon on the lush lawn of Lianhua Park- your call. Any of Shenzhen's 15 parks will guarantee you a jolt of oxytocin. Lychee Park Mangrove Park; Photograph from Anton Kicker Lianhua ParkPhotograph from: The Local Music Scene:In Coco Park, in Shekou, in hidden corners scattered around the globe. There are open mics almost every day of the week, which attracts jammers who favor an eclectic mix of music. An insider's tip from Sessy, a Canadian rooted singer songwriter: "Shekou has the most music venues, while B10 and Brown Sugar Jar are the best for original acts from far wide and locals." Sessy is a local musician. Chinese Cultural Diversity: Shenzhen has been attracting a curious, courageous crowd since its establishment as the Special Economic Zone 33 years ago. "To me a place is defined by its occupants, Shenzhen is an immigrant city, so it offers much more flavors than most other cities in China" says Ronald Aai. With people from all different parts of China mixing and marrying here, the risk of genetic deceases is significantly reduced. Other benefits of cultural diversity include a wide range of Chinese cuisines, standardized languages, fast growing infrastructure, and the open-mindedness of the population, all of which will be discussed later in the article. Foreign Influences: In recent years Shenzhen saw an explosion of high school graduates pursuing further education abroad. The overseas returnees, "haigui", therefore became a large and strongest Haigui network in the country. These haiguis with better foreign languages skills and stronger understandings of the global economy come back to do businesses that feed the need of domestic and international markets. Shenzhen also attracts a significant amount foreigners who come here to establish their own interpretation of "home": the Portofino Shenzhen is a beautiful seaside residential town imitating the style of the famous Italian Piazzetta. malls, it provides a facilitating environment for fashion. Plus Shenzhen attracts tons of talents, every individual has his/her own way to express fashion. You see multivariate fashion elements just by walking down the street. I can say that we're making collective effort to make this city look more fashionable." says Josephine Chan, a girl who, in her own words, "loves fashion to the bones". Shenzhen's own fashion brand Jixiangzhai @ London Fashion WeekPhotograph from: Josephine Chan Convenient Transportation: "Ten years ago we were eagerly awaiting completion of the buses running from early in the morning till midnight, getting from place to place in Shenzhen is always a breeze. Taxis are relatively expensive here but they are ubiquitous-that is the city saying: "We've got your back". 8. Hiking: Shenzhen is blessed with its geographical advantage of being in a hilly area. Which means that you don't have to drive all the way out to the country to take up those peaks. With multiple accessible hiking sites inside the city like Wutong Mountain and Nanshan Mountain, you can get a slice of nature and a liberating workout without the hassle of preparing for a long trip. 9. The BeachesWe live up to everything you'd expect from a coastal city. Yes, including the sprawling beaches. Bathe in the sun and take a dip at Dameisha and Xichong beaches, the two popular public beaches, the two popular publ container ships go by on the beaches. Decent Air Quality: Among the major metropolises in the mainland, Shenzhen is probably the only one that has blue skies nine days out of ten. We have not compromised the air quality for the monstrous efficiency of development to the degree other Chinese cities have. So take a deep breath, because you can. The Secret Spots: Ever stumbled upon the private theatre in Coastal City? Or that café in Chegongmiao with cats that comfortably enjoy the guests' laps? What about the hidden store in Shekou where you can buy cheap cheese? As a local who's lived here for 20 years, the city still surprises me everyday. To start your scavenger hunt, check out 10 secret spots you should go see right now by Jen Murray. We're a Bunch of Bookworms: If you see long lines in front of the Shenzhen library at 8:30 in the morning, don't be surprised because we're passionately devoted in the quest of knowledge. And the city knows us well—the 24-hour bookstore in Book City provides a home for midnight readers who sate themselves through printed lines, and the Shang Shu Bar has a collection of old bound books that smell like time-honored wisdom. Book City is the world's biggest book store that serves the public as a go-to hangout place and public library, where children and adults alike indulge in knowledge through the pages. Book City also has a big Music store that has a large collection of CDs, DVDs and records in different genres, catering to all music junkies. 24 Hour BookstorePhotograph from: A City that is Easy to Escape:One perk of living in Shenzhen is that it's easy to escape from it. I know it sounds absurd, but think of it as the perfect girlfriend who gives you maximum freedom to hang out with your buddies. Hong Kong is within reach of a few train stations, a trip to Guangzhou takes an hour on the luxurious express train, and the paradise-like Yangshuo is one night's bus ride away. Better still we have international flights from 5 nearby airports to Thailand, Philippines and more, that means you can be on a tropical beach in a matter of seconds. Beauty and Spas: If you're thinking of a luxurious spa in a five-star hotel, you're only seeing the tip of the iceberg. Shenzhen's service industry caters to people at all economic backgrounds. An all day or even all night spa experiences awaits you at one of the many Chinese Day Spas, where you can

Style mavens marvel at the grand display windows and countless swanky boutiques in MixC mall, while folks who need to pinch pennies go for Dongmen and Huaqiangbei, where shopping is turned into a game because you can bargain

Photographs from Anton Kicker You Can Find the Old and New China Here: "Shenzhen is a combination of the old and the new meeting in one place. Although Shenzhen is a sprawling metropolis, there are hundreds of places in Shenzhen, be it a little more rural area or in a back alley, that are reminiscent of old China. Within five minutes, you could be walking down a street and be in old China, and the next minute, be faced with some of the tallest buildings you have ever seen, bustling with business men and women."-Jen Murray. Photograph from Anton Kicker Shenzhen Speed:Whether it's a term that Shenzheners take pride in or a national clicke, Shenzhen has definitely lived up to the notorious "Shenzhen Speed" by being the kind of city whose change is visible on a daily basis. The famous Guomao building built in 1985 was known for being constructed at a speed of three stories per day, and now, twenty years later, new skyscrapers emerging against the skyline has become as normal as eating and sleeping. Check out [this song](

Photograph from Anton Kicker Great for Makers: It's easy to prototype your own product especially electronic ones since you can find almost any components you want. Here's a whole guide to where to go to get these components. Shenzhen has an incredibly friendly community for not only software startups, but also hardware startups and so is PCH, which had helped connect Apple Company to Shenzhen factories. Electronics Supplier to the World: There are so many electronic components enough to build robots here. Huaqiangbei is a concrete forest carpeted with more electronic components. As Sergio Flores del Castillo observed when he tried to shop for a phone: "It's a one stop shop for rip-off phones, authentic smartphones, repair workshops and any tiny phone component you can or cannot think of". In the maze of the many electronic factories in Baoan and Longgang, you can find so many products that, as Sergio put it: "So many light bulbs enough to light up every city in Lithuania." from Hong Kong, has many thanks to give to Shenzhen, a land full of opportunities: "When I established my startup three years ago, I noticed that the IT system in mainland was not yet perfect". Because of the proximity between the two places, Alfred was able to make immediate comparisons between the IT companies in Shenzhen and those in Hong Kong and based on his observations, he refined his product and service qualities to cater to the needs of clients in China. Stories like this is only one among a million of brilliant startups in many different areas in Shenzhen, whose openness, friendliness and constant changes make it a place that nurture dreams. Pot of Chinese and Global CuisineForeigners tend to underestimate the significance of food in Chinese culture, now envision food culture in the most culturally diverse city: that means Shenzhen is a melting pot of Chinese cuisines from a university at times. Whichever quirky hobby you're into, you can find a circle of people who rolls with you: there are movie clubs, improv comedy workshop, AcroYoga, writers club, you name it. And if you can't find a group you're into? The college rule applies here: start one yourself! Likeminded people attract, and the city works as a catalyst. We

 Being Pick-pocketed: The city works on every single aspect possible to make its citizens feel safe and pampered: first of all, compared to taxis in other mainland cities, the drivers here barely refuse to take passengers; in addition, the street signs are so clear and straightforward it's almost impossible to get lost; what's more, there are more than

 Government:We're the "wild west" of China where free market economy first unleashed in China. The benefit was seen overnight: the mobile phone industry especially experienced an almost explosive serendipity of wealth. Most companies started off with making cheap "shanzhai" or rip-off phones, which supply a great percentage of demand in the economy with trade, finance and investment. Hong Kong's democratic political structure also influenced Shenzhen benefit from being only a metro ride away from an amazing shopping site, vacation venue, and city with a great to 2008 Shenzhen experienced a very positive NGO registration reform, where grassroot organizations can register at the civilians affair department directly, without having to find an administrative body to oversee their activities beforehand. Shenzhen is also opening its doors to foreign charitable organizations, to allow them to set up offices in the city, and enabling foreigners to register for their charitable organizations directly in the office at Coastal City. Sebastien Bourgeois founded his NGO Irngo three years ago when he found that a lot of factories in Shenzhen and the PRD area are overproducing due to a pursuit of profit. His NGO focuses on collecting overproduced goods and redistributing them to orphanages, schools for disabled children, and financially challenged families. "People here are extremely helpful and understanding.  Well, we make every effort to lower our carbon emission. The electric taxis here in Shenzhen is one factor that made a major contribution. part of Hong Kong that is contiguous with mainland China. The city's relationship to Hong Kong, for all practical purposes, is that of a suburb, albeit, a very new and modern suburb. In fact, the city of Shenzhen has today become an integral part of Hong Kong, serving many supportive functions for Hong Kong for which there is simply not space in Hong Kong itself, given that Hong Kong is also home to millions of residents who feel a special attachment to the city and who therefore would not be inclined to make way for yet more skyscrapers and office blocks to, for example, house the many foreign trade representations that wish to set up shop in Hong Kong. Fortunately for Hong Kong, nearby Shenzhen was something of a blank page waiting to be written on - and written on, it has indeed been since the late 1970s, when foreign direct investment began to forever transform this sleepy fishing village into a modern metropolis. A Brief History Shenzhen's late prehistory dates back to 6-7 thousand years ago, when a Neolithic dune culture (ca.

 4500 BCE) inhabited the coastal region of southern China, most notably, in the area of Guangdong-Fujian-Zhejiag Provinces (and on the island of Taiwan, across the Taiwan straits from Fujian Province). In the Shenzhen-Dongguan area, numerous such finds have been excavated around the old city of Xiantou (called the Xitou site) and the Hutoupu Contemporary Art, designed by the Austrian architect firm, Coop Himmelb(l)au® - click on this external link... and, following the video-intro (it loads quite slowly), click on "English" at the bottom of the page). These were a rather modern, relatively speaking, Stone Age people, whose dwellings indicate a highly developed culture. They lived in the coastal area presumably in order to be close to the bountiful food source that the Pearl River Estuary represented, while the practice of residing on dunes would protect them and their settlements were located not on the shores of the estuary, but farther inland, though still within the river delta). As an indication of the relatively advanced level of "technological" development of these dune dwellers, they made use of "cellars", dug into the sand dunes, that could keep foodstuffs cool, thus providing a food storage facility that could ameliorate the shifting luck of the daily riverine "catch" (fishes, crustaceans, molluscs (clams, oysters, scallops), etc.), though they were also part-time farmers. By the time of the Baiyue ("Hundred Yue") people. They were very adept at pottery-making, as is witnessed by the discovery of several of their kilns, unearthed in the area. They too lived mainly on fishing combined with a smattering of agriculture in the mix. The Baiyue folk apparently arrived in China as part of a mass migration, possibly from the south. Whether they displaced the dune dwellers who had lived here before them, or whether the latter were absorbed into the Baiyue is not known. The rest of the history of present-day Shenzhen follows roughly that of the province itself (including the influx of Han Chinese immigrants fleeing unrest in the north, beginning with the Jin (CE 264-420) Dynasty), up until 1573, roughly, when the territory corresponding to present-day Shenzhen was established as a county by the name of Xin'an as part of the enlargement of the territory corresponding to present-day Hong Kong in the south. The fate of Xin'an County was altered by the Treaty of Nanking (1842), which ceded Hong Kong (initially the entire Kowloon Peninsula, then later the New Territories as well (the surrounding islands such as Lantau Island and Hong Kong Island itself)) to Great Britain, the whole of which was returned to China in 1997. In 1913, and with Hong Kong no longer belonging to Xin'an County, the Republic of China renamed the county to Ban'an County in order that its name not conflict with a county of the same name in Henan Province. As a curiosum, Shenzhen is the only city in otherwise Cantonese Guangdong where Mandarin is the primary spoken language. (To learn more about the general history of Guangdong Province, click here.) Present-Day Shenzhen The sleepy fishing village that was Shenzhen up until the end of the 1970s began to experience exponential growth thereafter, following the opening of China and the changed regulation that was implemented at that time, permitting foreign direct investment. Since then, Shenzhen's growth has literally skyrocketed (think: skyscrapers). Shenzhen is one of the fastest-growing cities in China, attracting much talent from all over the country as well as from abroad, since Shenzhen has become renowned as a place of opportunity. The city is home to the Shenzhen Stock Exchange (SZSE), one of China's four bourses. In spite of its rapid growth, the city's expansion has managed to incorporate "the best of both worlds", i.e., the natural world (parks, gardens, a zoo, an 18-hole golf course, etc.) combined with the glass-steel-&-concrete world of skyscrapers. Besides its role as a high-tech powerhouse and as a budding financial center, Shenzhen is committed to preserving the beauty and the ambience of its South China Sea location, so as to strengthen the city's role as a popular tourist destination as well. Popular attractions in and around the city include the Evergreen Resort, the Yinhu Resort, Honey Lake Holiday Village, the Chinese Folk Culture Villages, Fairy Lake Botanical Gardens, Xiaomeisha Beach Park, the Wild Animal Zoo and Guanlan Lake Golf Resort. With its mild climate and its cosmopolitan feel, Shenzhen is something of a pearl for its permanent residents as well as for its many visitors who feel as much at home in this smartly attractive seaport city as back in San Diego or in Baltimore in the US, or in La Rochelle, France, for that matter recorded in 1410 (the 8th year of Emperor Yongle in the Ming Dynasty). In the local dialect, the ditches between the fields are commonly known as zhen (/jnn/) or yong, the name Shenzhen ('deep ditch' /shnn-jnn/) came from the fact that there was a deep irrigation ditch near the village. It started to grow with trade in the early Qing Dynasty (1644-1912). The most striking thing about Shenzhen is its development history as a Special Economic Zone in China and its meteoric rise from a small fishing town in the Pearl River Delta to being one of China's most innovative modern metropolises. In May 1980, the Central Committee designated Shenzhen as a Special Economic Zone, and Shenzhen implemented special economic policies and economic management systems to create a favorable investment, and adhere to an export-oriented economy model as the goal of development. In the past 40 years, Shenzhen's GDP grew from less than 200 million yuan to 2.7 trillion yuan, and the population grew by 19.5 million people! Shenzhen weather Shenzhen is in a humid subtropical climate zone with wet, scorching summers and mild, sunny winters. Its coastal maritime weather is changeable and keeps the pollution away, making Shenzhen is from October to April.

The weather during this period is pleasant with much less rainfall and the occurrence of a typhoon is very rare compared to the summer months. See more details on Shenzhen is definitely a safe city for travel. China is a country with strict gun controls and penalties for crime, and now police patrols and CCTV are everywhere on the streets, visitors don't have to worry too much about safety even if they are out at 4 or 5 a.m. However, Shenzhen is a migrant city with a complex population structure, so pickpocketing and theft can still happen occasionally. Generally, as an international metropolis, the safety of Shenzhen must be among the top cities in the world. Shenzhen Food Shenzhen is nowhere near being a gastronomical capital like neighboring Hong Kong, but you'll find cuisines from all over China due to the migration of large numbers of people from across the country. There are also many Asian restaurants and Western-style restaurants. They are notably less expensive than those in Hong Kong. Click for more about Shenzhen food. Contact us to customize a Shenzhen food tour. Shenzhen food to
