The Netherlands' police hold a wide range of personal data, including phone numbers and incident reports, to efficiently carry out their tasks. You can request access to this data by submitting a written letter, and you're also entitled to correct or delete it if needed. The Autoriteit Persoonsgegevens website provides sample letters for both requests. Justis.nl uses cookies for web statistics, security and performance purposes. Below, you can read why Justis.nl places cookies and which cookies are involved and find more information about their purpose and how long they are active. Information on police records can be difficult to access, especially for those who aren't directly involved in an ongoing investigation. Typically, information on juvenile cases and certain other sensitive issues is kept private. However, law enforcement agencies are required by state laws to provide access to public records, with varying degrees of openness depending on the jurisdiction.
